Bournville

Bournville is a village on the south side of Birmingham, best known for its connections with the Cadbury family and of course chocolate. Historically it also had many stables and thriving blacksmiths around the village. These combined influences inspired the design of the knob, a blend of the smithy’s anvil and a chocolate drop!

Bromford

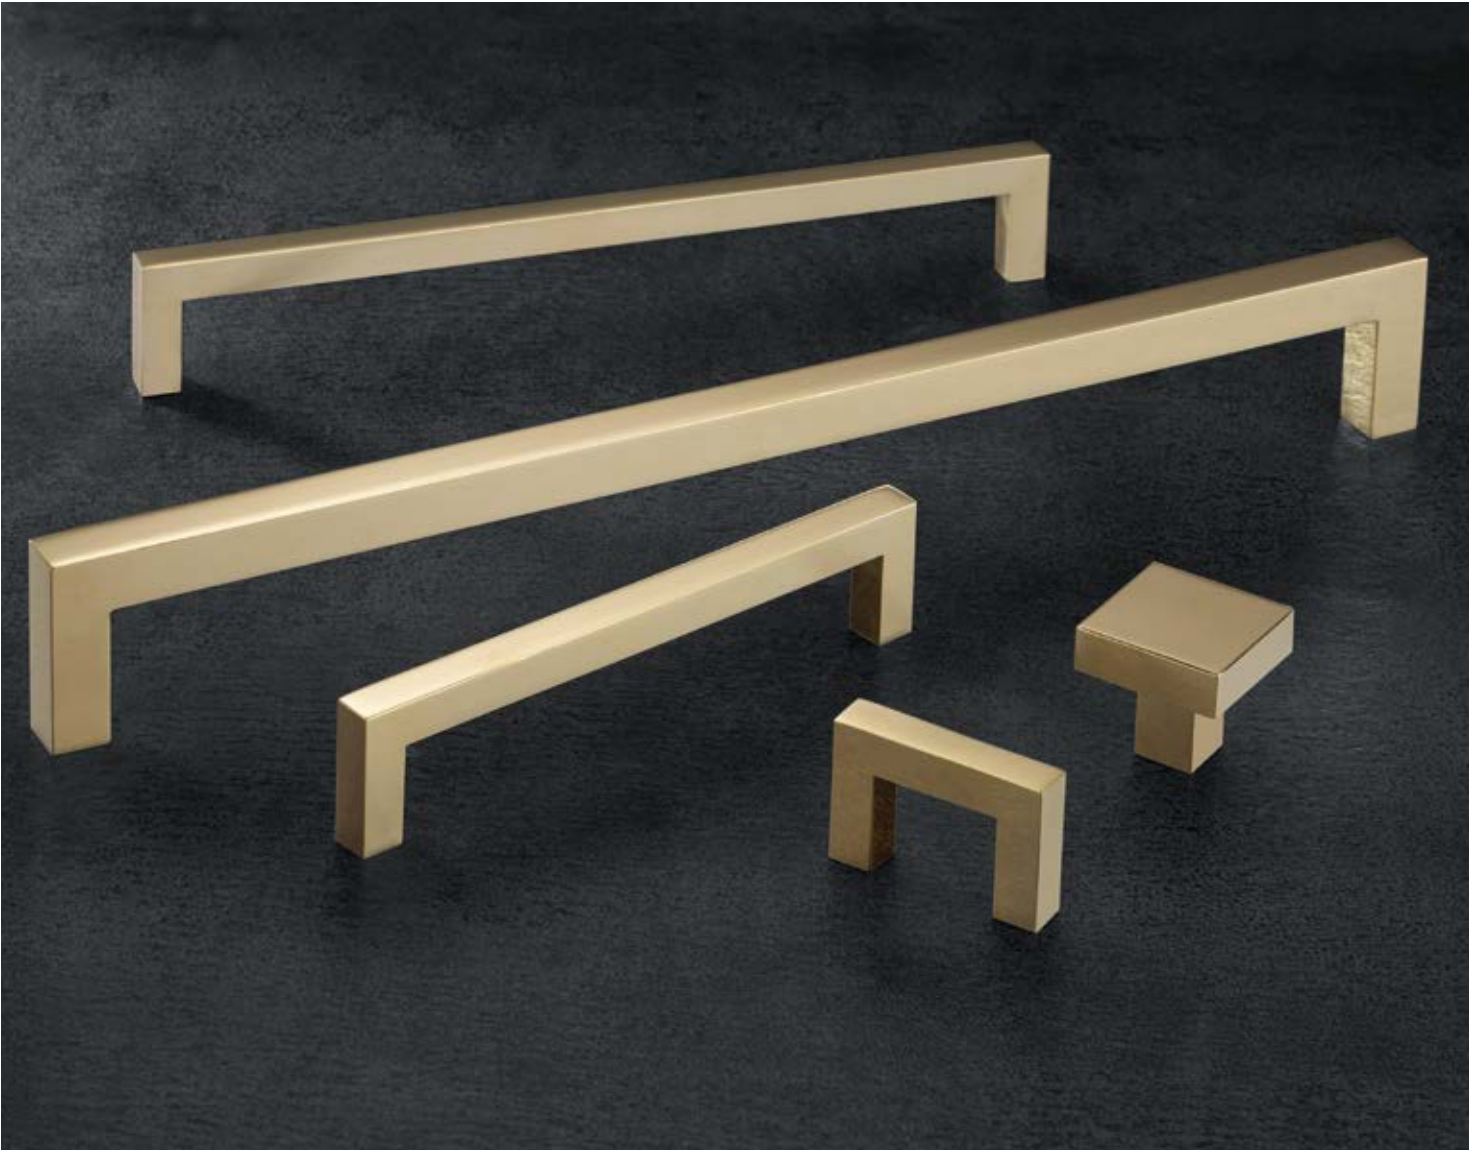

Bromford was a bridge that crossed the river Tame, linking several Birmingham suburbs to the city centre. Today it is still an essential commuter route into the heart of Birmingham. It is a fast, direct, no-nonsense journey. It takes no unnecessary turns, swells, rises or dips and it is that straight line simplicity which epitomises the Bromford range.

Belgrave

The Belgrave Middleway is a fast moving thoroughfare on the south side of Birmingham connecting Sparkbrook and Leebank, and passing through Balsall Heath. It is a main artery through many of the most cosmopolitan areas of the inner city and is the proud home of the Birmingham Central Mosque. These diverse themes marry exquisitely well into this neo-classical design.

Sparkbrook

Companion to the Leebank range. An engineered look has been created by the crossed line knurling on these handles. After the Industrial Revolution, it was the inner city areas of Birmingham, like Leebank and Sparkbrook that provided much of the workforce for the factories of Britain’s manufacturing heartland.

Carlton

Once, every city had an Odeon cinema as a feature in it's landscape.

In just 10 years between the founding of the chain in Birmingham and founder Oscar Deutsch's death in 1941, 258 Odeon cinemas opened throughout Britain, their architecture synonymous with the Art Deco period. The Carlton range, named for a long association of screen advertising at Odeon cinemas, reflects this styling.

Gaumont

Oscar Deutsch, founder of Odeon Cinemas in the 1930's, was born in Birmingham, the son of a Jewish scrap merchant. His publicity team claimed Odeon stood for "Oscar Deutsch entertains Our Nation". Gaumont British was a picture maker who aired films at the Odeon Cinemas.

Gaumont and Carlton, with their Art Deco styling, are Armac Martin's tribute to a great son of Birmingham.
